

ABSTRACT

A method for diagnosing various forms of dementia, including MCI, and Alzheimer's disease(AD) is disclosed. The method involves directly detecting the presence of a biochemical marker, specifically thrombospondin, in bodily fluid, preferably blood or a blood product. The detection is by an immunoassay incorporating an antibody specific to thrombospondin, or alternatively an autoantibody to a thrombospondin antibody.

G:\FILES\FL\PATENTS\2132_113_APP1.wpd